Immunizations

What is immunity?

Once you become sick, the body begins to fight the disease through its generation of antibodies, which remain in the body after the disease is gone and will help protect you in the future. This is called immunity. Instead of waiting to develop natural immunity through becoming sick, you can prevent certain diseases through immunization.

Immunization protects you by introducing into your body a small amount of the disease antigen that will instigate an antibody reaction as if you were exposed to the disease. Therefore, your body will start to build natural antibodies against the disease without the symptoms of having the disease. Vaccines are available for many diseases, including:

- Chicken Pox
- Diphtheria
- German Measles
- Haemophilus influenzae type b (Hib)
- Hepatitis A
- Hepatitis B
- Human Papilloma Virus
- Measles
- Meningitis
- Mumps
- Pneumonia
- Polio
- Shingles (Herpes Zoster)
- Tetanus
- Whooping Cough

Seasonal Vaccination

There are certain immunizations that need to be repeated every season such as Canada's most common disease – seasonal influenza or, as it is commonly known, the flu. Influenza immunization is the best method of prevention and it is usually at no cost for seniors.

It is especially important to have the flu vaccine this year to increase immunity for the seasonal flu, which will help reduce the chances of catching the flu and the severity of the symptoms. The seasonal flu vaccination is readily available at your local pharmacy or public health centre.

Humidifiers & Vaporizers

Humidifiers and vaporizers can help soothe problems caused by dry indoor air. Vaporizers heat the water and add steam to the air. Cool-mist humidifiers add a cool fine vapour. Both devices can help relieve skin and nasal dryness. Adding moisture to the air, whether using a cool or warm mist, may also help ease symptoms such as dry sinuses, bloody noses, cracked lips, nasal and chest congestion, along with coughing.
